"We've gone through so many challenges since the start of this pandemic. Through the strength and teachings of our ancestors and elders, we remain strong and we continue to persevere. We have to continue to pray and to show our support for one another. Our health care workers have given us the guidance and direction to keep ourselves and others safe and it's our responsibility to practice those measures daily. Please minimize in-person gatherings, wear masks in public, get fully vaccinated, and if you are fully vaccinated, please get a booster shot before the holidays. We are in this together and we will get through this pandemic together," said Navajo Nation President Jonathan Nez.

Health care facilities across the Navajo Nation continue to administer COVID-19 vaccines. If you would like to receive one of the COVID-19 vaccines, please contact your health care provider and schedule an appointment.

"As we approach the holidays, we need to step up our efforts to encourage everyone to practice COVID-19 safety protocols to reduce the spread of the virus. Together, we have to be supportive and continue to look after our elders and those with underlying health conditions. Please keep praying and be safe, especially in public settings," said Vice President Myron Lizer.
