"If you have a fever, body aches, coughing, or other symptoms that may be related to COVID-19, please do your best to isolate yourself and get tested as soon as possible. We must do our best to minimize the risks of exposures in our homes, at work, and in public places. Please continue to take precautions, wear masks in public, and minimize travel off the Navajo Nation. We are in this fight together against COVID-19 and we will overcome it through prayer and by taking safety measures to keep everyone safe and healthy," said Navajo Nation President Jonathan Nez.

Health care facilities across the Navajo Nation continue to administer COVID-19 vaccines. If you would like to receive one of the COVID-19 vaccines, please contact your health care provider and schedule an appointment.

"This pandemic continues to challenge our people in many ways. We have to continue to support one another and to pray for ourselves and others, so that we remain strong to overcome COVID-19. Please help our health care workers by doing everything you can to protect yourselves from COVID-19," said Vice President Myron Lizer.
