“The Navajo people have set a great example on how to push back on COVID-19 by adhering to the guidance of our public health experts and scientists. We must continue to remain diligent and take extra precautions in public places, especially if you travel off the Navajo Nation where COVID-19 protocols are minimal or non-existent. We are still in the midst of a pandemic, so please get vaccinated and get your booster shot if you haven’t already. We are in this together and we are strong and resilient like our ancestors,” said Navajo Nation President Jonathan Nez.

Health care facilities on the Navajo Nation continue to administer COVID-19 vaccines. If you would like to receive one of the COVID-19 vaccines, please contact your health care provider and schedule an appointment.

“Continue to pray for all of those on the frontlines of this pandemic. We thank them for all of the sacrifices they continue to make to keep our people safe and to save as many lives as possible. Please be safe and practice the safety measures recommended by the health experts,” said Vice President Myron Lizer.
