Navajo Nation honors and pays tribute to fallen
White Mountain Apache Police Officer Adrian Lopez

WHITERIVER, Ariz. – Navajo Nation President Jonathan Nez joined family members, law enforcement officers from across the country, and the White Mountain Apache tribal community, to honor and remember fallen White Mountain Apache Police Officer Adrian Lopez during a funeral service held at the Chief Alchesay Activity Center in Whiteriver, Ariz. on Thursday. Officer Lopez lost his life in the line of duty while responding to a call on June 2, 2022.

On behalf of the Navajo people, President Nez presented a condolence letter to Officer Lopez's wife, Lushana Lopez, their two children, and relatives. The funeral service drew support from law enforcement officers from across the country, numerous counties, and many other tribes. White Mountain Apache Tribal Chairman Kasey Velasquez, Navajo Nation Chief of Police Daryl Noon, and Navajo County Board of Supervisors Dawnafe Whitesinger were in attendance as well.

“Today, we grieve alongside our brothers and sisters from the White Mountain Apache Tribe and we offer our thoughts and prayers for Officer Lopez’s wife Lushana, his children, his family, his fellow officers, and many others who were a part of his life. Officer Lopez was a special person and a friend to all as he gave so much of himself to serve and protect the people of the White Mountain Apache Tribe. We will always honor and remember him for everything he sacrificed and for the lives that he saved throughout his law enforcement career,” said President Nez.

President Nez also accompanied over 150 law enforcement officers from multiple jurisdictions including federal state and tribal police to escort Officer Lopez and his family during the funeral procession. Many community members paid their respects along the way to honor Officer Lopez, who lost his life in the line of duty on June 2, 2022.

Officer Lopez joined the White Mountain Apache Police Department in January of 2022. He previously served with the Wind River Police Department and was a U.S. Army veteran. Following Officer Lopez’s passing, the Navajo Nation signed an agreement with the White Mountain Apache Police Department, allowing Navajo Nation Officers to provide public safety coverage and support for the White Mountain Apache Tribe while the community grieved.

“The White Mountain Apache Tribe is grieving alongside the family of Fallen Officer Adrian Lopez, Sr. Our Tribe has been in a state of incredible sorrow as we begin to recover from the loss of Officer Lopez, supporting Officer Lonnie Thompson as he heals from his injuries, as well as helping comfort all the families affected by this incident. We are immensely grateful to President Nez, the Navajo Nation, and the Navajo Nation Police Department for supporting the White Mountain Apache Tribe and stepping in to protect our community as we mourn the loss of our Fallen Officer,” said White Mountain Apache Chairman Kasey Velasquez.

During the service, Officer Lopez was remembered as a kind, fun, and generous person who loved his family and his fellow officers very much. On Monday, the police department and community members came together to hold a candlelight vigil to honor Officer Lopez and offer their thoughts and prayers to the family.

“The Navajo people are greatly saddened by the loss of Officer Lopez. To his wife, family, and all of the people of the White Mountain Apache Tribe, we want you to know that you remain in our prayers each day. Please take comfort in knowing that Officer Lopez is now in the hands of our Creator,” said Vice President Lizer.

The Navajo Nation continues to offer our prayers and support to the White Mountain Apache Nation. As of June 8, the Navajo Nation Police Department agreed to extend its services until June 13, 2022 to relieve the White Mountain Apache Police Officers as they pay respects during Officer Lopez’s burial in Los Angeles California.
